

The N. Y. Courier & Enquirer attacks Mr. CAMBRELENG. It does so, because, as a member of the bank committee, he has ably and fearlessly discharged his duty. The editors of the print intimate that they have lost "any respect they entertained for the character which Mr. C. has sustained as an honorable man." Indeed! James Watson Webb and M. M. Noah have withdrawn the confidence they once reposed in Mr. Cambreleng as "an honorable man"! How amazingly unfortunate for Mr. C.! The intrepid, capable and invaluable representative of the interests of our metropolis—the incorruptible and efficient advocate of the principles and measures of the democracy—the sterling and faithful representative, possessing in an eminent degree, and in the largest sense, the confidence and esteem of his constituents and of the republicans of the state,—constituents and republicans who admire his talents and warmly approve his consistent and elevated course,—has lost the confidence of two individuals, who, having deserted from the democratic party, assailed its friends and calumniated its measures and usages, stand before the community as the subsidized instruments of a corrupting and dangerous monied power, and with the inef- faceable brand of venality upon their foreheads! Truly, Mr. Cambreleng must feel, very acutely, the withdrawal of the "respect" and confidence of such persons.

Mr. C., we suppose, is now to be turned over to the fate of the "money changers." He is to be "put down," along with gov. Throop, the state of- ficers, the Argus, and the "train of editorial curs" (epithets with which venality and apostacy stigma- tise the great body of the sound and unwavering de- mocratic journals in this state.) Truly, he may count it a high compliment that he is the object of the abuse and hostility of the Courier and Enquirer. There are few republicans among us, however emi- nent, and however pure, whose reputations can withstand the praise and friendship of such a jour- nal,—standing in such a light before this communi- ty, and thus estimated by the democracy of the state.
