

We have been assured by a respectable gentleman just returned from Washington city, that a general impression prevails at that place, that Gen. Jackson will veto the bill renewing the charter of the United States bank, when it is reached us from another source, and the charter presented to him. A rumour to this effect, has a character of that now noticed, leaves no doubt upon our minds that such is the fact, as deeply as we deplore the issue.

The present wholesome currency of the United States we regard as identified with the existence of the bank, and we know of no measure so likely to produce every species of commercial distress, and a general depression as the prostration of the bank. We most sincerely hope the rumour is incorrect.
