

R. M. Whitney, formerly one of the directors of the U. S. Bank, has published a card in the Washington Globe, denying the truth of some of the statements of the minority of the Bank Committee in regard to the evidence of Mr. Biddle. He says, "as soon as the documents and testimony are published, I shall probably shew the minority, that if I am, as they say, an 'informer,' I shall prove myself a detector and corrector."
